

McKesson's Statement on Climate Change

We recognize that climate change is one of the biggest challenges society faces in the 21st century and that it has a direct and significant impact on human health.

We also acknowledge that human action is related to the underlying environmental factors that contribute significantly to climate change and human health. Therefore, we embrace our responsibility, as a global corporation, and as a leader in healthcare, to take action in support of protecting our planet, sustaining our business, and ultimately serving the health of patients and communities, some of whom are dealing with the impacts of climate-related issues and illnesses.

Building on a strong foundation of social and environmental action across the enterprise and our supply chain, as well as a long-time company culture of focus on improving patient outcomes, we're on a journey to amplify our social and environmental action and impact.

- We are amplifying our strategy and action across Sustainability & ESG (environmental, social and governance) topics, including in the area of climate action, for the sake of both business and societal value.
- The Governance Committee of our Board of Directors oversees climate issues through regular updates on Sustainability & ESG matters. We have also created senior management level engagement and responsibility for implementing climate and other environmental impact efforts, and we are increasing our employee engagement and communications on the impacts of climate change and opportunities to take individual and community action.
- Across our operations in the United States, Canada and Europe, we are sharpening our focus on environmental actions, including greater carbon accounting and disclosure, emissions reduction and energy efficiency programs, renewable electricity procurement and use, and transportation efficiency improvements.

We will leverage our strong foundation of actions, and our impact-driven culture to amplify our commitments and disclosure on social and environmental issues that are meaningful to our enterprise and our stakeholders, spanning a range of issues from access to healthcare and diversity, equity and inclusion, to energy efficiency and climate action.
